Key Recommendations
Interviewees offered their top suggestions for community-based overdose prevention programs.

Prioritize building trust with the people you are serving, treat them with dignity and respect, and have a willingness to listen.

Involve directly impacted people and people with lived experience in every aspect of implementation.

Find individuals who can champion the work and advocate effectively.

Building collaborative partnerships is key. Make sure you bring everyone to the table from the beginning – public health, EMS, law enforcement, and most importantly community partners.

Avoid duplication of efforts – contract to organizations in your county or connect with organizations in other parts of the state who are already engaging in the work.

Think carefully about which organization or partner is best suited to implementing the program.

Hire the right people – consider their related backgrounds and lived experiences.

Educate everyone on harm reduction.

Understand that getting people on board and implementing these programs takes time.

Except from Qualitative Study of Local Health Department Programs to Prevent Opioid Overdose in North Carolina 2020
For more information, please contact HarmReduction@duke.edu